Show your price: a guide for small businesses

for shops, home businesses and service providers who sell on boards, WhatsApp and Instagram

The idea. At KR Market the price card does the first part of the selling. Asking "how much?" feels like a small promise to buy, so many quiet buyers never ask. They just move on. A visible price lets them decide on their own.

1. Find where people have to ask

- Look at your shop board, your WhatsApp catalogue, your Instagram posts and your Google listing. Where would a stranger have to message you to get the price? Write those places down.

2. Put a number on it

- Fixed price: show it.
- Price varies: show a "starting from" price ("Blouse stitching from 450") or a range.
- Custom work: show 2 or 3 real past examples with what they cost.

3. Make it big and close to the product

- Like the KR Market cards: the price sits on the product, not on a separate list.
- On Instagram: the price on the image or in the first line of the caption, not "DM for price".

4. Keep room to talk

- A starting price does not stop you from negotiating. It starts the conversation instead of ending it.

5. Answer the second question for them

- After price, people ask about delivery, size and payment. Add one line: "Delivery in Bengaluru, UPI accepted".

6. Test it for 2 weeks

- Change one place (for example the WhatsApp catalogue). Count enquiries before and after. Keep it if it helps.

Practical steps, not guaranteed results. "DM for price" hides the price from the people who will not DM.
