The price ladder: make your biggest pack the obvious choice for salons, spas, gyms, cafes, coaching, any business that sells sizes, packs or durations

> What I saw. A massage chair counter in a Bangalore mall: 5 min ₹149, 10 min ₹299, 15 min ₹449, 20 min ₹599, 25 min ₹649. Every step costs ₹150 more, until the last one, which costs ₹50. My take: that cheap last step pulls people to the top.

☐ 1. Write your ladder down

- List every size, pack or duration you sell, with its price, smallest to biggest.

☐ 2. Work out the price per unit

- Price per minute, per class, per kg, per session. Most owners have never looked at this column.

☐ 3. Make the top step the best deal

- The biggest option should have the lowest price per unit, by a clear margin. A small jump at the end ("just ₹50 more for 5 more minutes") is easy to say yes to.

☐ 4. Keep a cheap entry step

- The first step lets people try you. It doesn't need to be profitable, it needs to be easy.

☐ 5. Show the math

- Write it on the menu: "Best value", "₹26 a minute", "Save ₹100". People won't calculate it themselves.

☐ 6. Check your margin

- Only make the top step cheaper per unit if it still makes money. Your cost per extra minute or unit is usually lower than your average cost.

☐ 7. Test for 2 weeks

- Count how many people pick each step before and after. Keep the change if the average bill goes up.

Practical steps, not guaranteed results. Change one thing at a time and measure it.
